VIOLET PENNINGTON

MOTHER, you know the story; ere he to war departed,
Turidu swore to Lola ever to be true-hearted;
Thro' days and years, thro' hopes and fears, true-hearted,
He came—but she was wedded,
Know you the tale, sweet mother,
To a new love he turn'd him, thus to forget the other.
He loved me - I loved him—he loved me, ah!
They met again, then with the old love waking,
All her vows forsaking, wild in her jealous madness,
She stole my lover and all my gladness.
Why, ah! why should I live then?
Honour and love departed.
Lola is now his love again, ah!
And I am broken-hearted.

VIOLET PENNINGTON

O day divine, what have you brought to me?
Light on the land, and glory on the sea,
New songs of mirth that ring across the world,
New flowers of hope about my feet unfurled!

O day divine, what will you leave with me,
When you are past, and but a memory?
Dreams of lost hours for which to mourn and sigh,
Or everlasting joy that cannot die?

O golden day, what have you brought to me?
A wondrous peace to hold eternally,
This soul that God has made forever mine,
This love that crowns my life, O day divine!
